1) Short light is the type of studio lighting setup where the face side of the subject farthest from the camera gets the main light. In this type of lighting setup, the side of the face which is toward the camera gets less light than the side facing away from the camera. The effect you get when using this lighting setup is a thin face. A photo tip worth remembering: short light helps to

Studio portrait photographers control ALL light in the work space as John did above and shoot on a simple background or elaborate set. That means that ambient isn't generally in play as it is with your situation. Is it possible to light your background and still achieve the 1-2 stop ratio you prefer and shoot at ISO 100? Or lower your shutter speed which will increase ambient without changes
